

I AM DYING.

[The following beautiful poem we copy from the Memphis (Tenn.) Bulletin. It is rarely we find such in the columns of a newspaper. It is sweetly, beautifully said.]

I AM DYING.
Raise my pillow, husband dearest—
Fainter and fainter comes my breath;
And these shadows, stealing slowly,
Must I know, be those of death.
Sit down close beside me, darling,
Let me clasp your warm, strong hand;
Yours, that ever has sustained me
To the borders of this land.

For your God and mine—my Father,
When I stood your wife and bride—
Where, upon a throne eternal,
Sits His loved and only Son.
I've had vision, and been dreaming
Of the part of joy and pain;
Year by year I've wandered backward,
Till I was a child again.

Dreamed of grief, and the moment
When I stood your wife and bride—
How my heart thrilled with love's triumph
In that hour of woman's pride!
Dreamed of thee—and all the earth seems
Firmly trod, as if my heart—
Oh! the bliss, the burning anguish
When I first knew we must part.

It has passed—and God has promised
All thy footstep shall attend;
He, that's more than friend or brother,
He'll be with thee to the end.
There's no shadow on the portals
Leading to my heavenly home—
Christ hath promised life eternal,
And he's the God who comes.

When life's trial wait around thee,
And its chilling shadows swell,
Shouldst thou think heaven that I am spared them,
Shouldst thou think that "all is well?"
Bring our boys unto my bedside,
My last blessing let them keep—
But they're sleeping—do not wake them—
They'll learn soon enough to weep.

Tell them often of thy mother,
Kiss them for me when they wake,
Lead them gently in life's pathway,
Love them tenderly for my sake.
Clasp my hand still closer, darling,
This, the last night of my life,
For, to-morrow, I shall never
Answer, when you call me "wife."

Fare the well, my noble husband,
Faint not 'neath this chastening rod;
Throw your strong arms round our children,
Keep them to thee—and God.

When Ladies Should be Looked at:
A writer in the Atlantic Monthly thus enlightens the belles of the street concerning the inalienable rights of men to look at their pretty faces:

There are some very pretty, but unhappy very ill-dressed women, who don't understand the laws of the road with regard to handsome faces. Nature and custom would no doubt agree in conceding to males the right of at least two distinct looks at every comely female countenance, without any infringement of the rules of courtesy, or the sentiment of respect. The first look is necessary to define the person of the individual one meets, so as to avoid her in passing. Any unusual attraction discovered in a first glance is sufficient apology for a second—not a prolonged and impudent stare, but an appreciating homage of the eyes, such as a stranger may in offensively yield to a passing image. It is astonishing how morbidly sensitive some vulgar beauties are to the slightest demonstration of this kind—When a lady walks the streets she leaves her virtuous indignation conspicuous at home; she knows well enough that the street is a picture gallery, where pretty faces framed in gaily bonnets are meant to be seen, and everybody has a right to see them.

TRADITIONS.—There are three things which never become rusty—the money of the benevolent—the shoe of the butcher's horse, and a woman's tongue.

Three things not easily done—to ally thirst with fire—to dry wet with water—to please all with everything that is done.

Three things that are as good as their better—dirty water to extinguish fire—a homely word to a blind man—and a wooden sword to a coward.

Three warnings from the grave—then knowest what I was, then see what I am, remember what thou art to be.

Three things of short continuance—a ladies love—a chip fire, and a brook's flood.

Three things that ought never to be absent from home—the cat, chimney, and the housewife.

Three things it is unwise to boast of—the flavor of thy ale, the beauty of thy wife, and the contents of thy purse.

THE ARTER DRESS.—There is no topic on which there is expended a larger amount of cheap and glib criticism than on dress, and especially the dress of women. Yet there is no better mark of civilization than well-dressed feminine excellence. The dress of the woman bespeaks her taste, her love of order, her respect for others and for herself. We are no advocates for extravagance or ostentation, for even with a moderate income, a woman may be always exquisitely dressed. A delicate combination of colors, a neat fit, and a perfect adaptation of the costume to the occasion, are the great secrets by which perfect elegance is achieved, and these are attainable in moderately priced fabrics, as well in the most expensive products of foreign looms.

If all funeral sermons were honest and candid, there might be more like this, preached lately by a very "hard" Western clergyman:

"I have been begged, entreated and importuned to preach this 'ere sermon, but I don't want to do it. I never did like the man; I never did know nothing good of him. He had horses and he run 'em; he had cocks and he fit 'em. I have heard he was occasionally caught at fires. The barbers will remove the body and sing the following hymn:

"With rapture we delight to see
The corpse removed."

HAIL COLUMBIA!—Mr. Nelson, of Tennessee, said in his speech of dissolution, "I have always thought if ever the two sections of this Union were arrayed against each other and two opposing armies were to meet, marching to the tune of Hail Columbia, I think that as they approached each other and heard the old familiar air, that they would throw down their arms and sink into fraternal embraces."
